Attack of the Cyberfeminists
Interview with Cyberfeminist International +VNS Matrix + +
www.obn.org/cfundef/defa.html
By: Mary-Anne Breen

Disclaimer
Submissions
Cyberfeminist International
+ Cyberfeminist international manifesto
Next Attack: Attack Reloaded
STOP ART: Strike!

Dating at The Blue Note on the Internet site: Visit The Blue Network! Where else'd you meet it at one of the coolest clubs in the world? Hang out, chat, and meet the hippest people in the world. Only at The Blue Note!

µHeaD xTRi MoTeR FeMiNiSt

"Through the work of cyberfeminist Nwanyia women there is now a plethora of cyberfeminists that is both female, male, and constructs of many of the world of cyberspace. At the same time, the work of VNS Matrix is the work of four women who have technologically complex inclusions."

"It's value for a cyborg then is political."

To wrote Donna Haraway in her seminal essay "A Cyborg Manifesto: Science Technology and Socialist-Feminism in the Late Twentieth Century". Haraway's cyborg is a hybrid of machine and organism, a creature of social reality as well as a creature of fiction. Haraway's cyborg is a theoretical and political construct, a figure that is used to challenge the boundaries of the human and the machine. Haraway's cyborg is a metaphor for the transgressive possibilities of the machine-enhanced cyberfeminist creating new versions of the traditional binary of male and female, and new ways of thinking about the relationship of the body to technology.

This image of hacking into the matrix' represents all that is phallocentric and patriarchal in the world. The VNS Matrix cyberfeminist manifesto is a direct response to this image of the Wetwired Man.

"In a moment I have not enough formal expressions. In discourse there is no embrace expressive of the body, only the organs of sex. The language of sex is inadequate. Sex is not enough. Sex is not enough. Sex is not enough